

Sharing the Gospel with 1 Million Students in 1,000 Days
NSP Launches “Meant for More” Campaign to Reach 1 Million Students with the Gospel

Whittier, CA: On Aug 5, the National School Project (NSP), a Christian Non-Profit Organization passionate about student-to-student evangelism on public school campuses, began a historic campaign to reach 1 million students with the gospel in the next 1,000 days.

During Meant for More, students will sign up to lead Meant for More Weeks at their schools in March of 2020. Students will host outreach events throughout the month and spread the message that all students on their campuses are meant for more than this world has to offer—they’re meant to know God.

“We’re so excited to already have students from 105 different campuses signed up to lead Meant for More Weeks at their schools this year, and praying in faith to see over 150 schools in at least 8 metropolitan areas get on board by the time March 2020 rolls around,” said Mark Hopson, president of NSP. “We can’t wait to see these courageous students tell the 250,000 students at their schools that they are meant for more.”

NSP is working to raise $8 million in funding over the next three years to accomplish its 1,000 day vision, with $1.8 million prepared for year one already. A portion of these funds will produce “Cause Boxes” that provide students with materials to host a Meant for More Week at their school. The “Cause Boxes” will also prepare students to connect with key Christians in their community including parents, teachers, and church leaders, who will help make their Meant for More Week a success.

“Of the hundreds of outreaches we’ve seen, the most powerful are the ones that have strong community support. Community support isn’t a fluffy idea that just sounds nice—it’s a real, tangible partnership that allows people to do something bigger than what any one person or one group could do on their own,” said Lisa Cohen, NSP Training Director.
